12-21-66

A former University of Montana assistant professor of forestry, Kent T. Adair, is a newly appointed assistant professor of forestry at the University of Missouri.

The announcement, effective Jan. 1, 1967, was made by Donald P. Duncan, director of the M.U. School of Forestry.

Adair received his B.S. in forestry from Colorado State University and his Master of Forestry degree from Oregon State University. He is currently studying for a Ph.D. degree at Colorado State University.

Adair served in the United States Coast Guard, 1951-54 and was timber management assistant with the U.S. Forest Service, 1958-59. In 1959 he was a consulting forester in Eugene, Ore. He served as a research associate in forest economics at Colorado State University, 1961-63, then he went to UM in Missoula where he was an assistant professor of forest economics until accepting the M.U. position this fall.

At Missouri, Adair will teach in the fields of wood products and building materials management and in residential and light construction. He will also undertake research in marketing and related fields.

Adair is the author of 10 publications in marketing, wood products and forest industries and is a member of Xi Sigma Pi, the Society of American Foresters, and the Northwest Scientific Association.
